What We Do:

Kanawha Valley - South Charleston & Institute, W.Va., Union Carbide operates three facilities in the Kanawha Valley in West Virginia: manufacturing operations in South Charleston and Institute and a technical center in South Charleston.

Opened in 1949, the South Charleston Technical Center is Carbide's largest center for engineering, research and development, and information technology. Major facilities include R&D labs, several chemical pilot plants (an intermediate step between bench-top laboratory activities and full-scale production operations) and an area that produces small quantities of chemicals for sale. The center also serves as a base for distribution, accounting, employee relations, investment recovery, purchasing and regional public affairs activities. The Technical Center has about 1,800 employees and is located on a 651-acre tract, of which about 125 acres are developed in a campuslike setting.
